

From:lishiek@yahoo.com

To: dralfredtsapse@yahoo.com

Date: Wednesday, May 20, 2009 9.27.53 PM

Dear Dr. Sapse,

I thought I'd give you an update as it has been 2 weeks today since my stem cell implant. I've been noticing some improvements. It seems to be flashes of vision. A few days ago, while watching television, my mother randomly tried to hand me the remote (in an area I could not see before) without telling me and I saw it. The next morning, I walked up the stairs and noticed her coming out of a room which was out of my field of vision. She has tested me a few times since. Some have been when I knew she was testing me, and sometimes when I wasn't aware of it. The results aren't consistent yet, sometimes I notice it, other times I don't; it doesn't seem to matter whether I knew of the testing or not. I'll let you know in the near future if there are any more improvements.

Sincerely,

Elisha Gonzales

Retinitis Pigmentosa Patient